He added: "For the last one year and a half, the government's done nothing to give me a movie to watch.".. In March Iran also carried out a suicide attack in Tehran as the government announced a campaign to protect the country. The New York Times recently published a piece about the recent surge in American deaths from firearm violence, which has caused some readers to question whether the nation's gun-control laws may actually be working. The Times, however, fails to acknowledge or address the fact that these recent gun-related deaths may have been precipitated by an epidemic of firearms being bought on the black market rather than legally purchased. One would think that someone with serious concerns about the dangers of an overheated gun would seek out a gun-shop and attempt to purchase one from an expert gun store that offers one of the top-quality firearms that would ensure the safety of the purchaser should they choose to go to such a place. However, that wouldn't be possible if the NRA-ILA (which represents gun makers and sellers) weren't making it a common practice in their campaigns to call for more restrictions on the availability of firearms to Americans through the NICS (National Instant Criminal Background Check System).[1] This is the system on which the NICS is based today to ensure that federal firearms purchasers are approved for firearms.. "The digital revolution is something that will happen when a single person with a computer and an idea has some ambition - not the powerful but the people with great ideas.".
